Chapter 6: Digital Image Editing

With so many new ways to capture photos — from flash memory devices to your smartphone's camera — the discussion of editing comes up often. The goal of this chapter is to educate you on the basics of the Photoshop image-

editing program and show you how to use it to create any graphic you need. After you learn the basics of Photoshop, you can also use it to create greeting cards, packaging designs, banners, and more. Even if you think you don't have any artistic talent, you can still create images that are perfectly acceptable. ## Understanding the Basics of Photoshop Although Photoshop is offered as a standalone program, its fully featured editing capabilities will save you more time if you install it with your computer. Photoshop Elements lets you edit digital images without having to invest the time that installing the full program requires. ## Understanding the workspace There are many ways to work with Photoshop, but the way that you work with an image is what defines it as being one you want to keep. When you're working on an image, do the following to help you edit and arrange your objects: * **Create a new layer:**

Click the New Layer icon in the Layers palette, just to the right of the background layer. From the New Layer dialog box, choose Color Over Layer, which turns the background black and creates a new layer above it. A new layer enables you to add to or subtract from the background as you edit the image. * **Zoom in or out:**

Click the Zoom tool on the Tools panel, and then click and drag to zoom in or out. You need to be able to zoom in and out of an image to edit it. Make sure the Zoom tool is visible on the Tools panel when you open a picture. * **Arrange objects:** Click the Move tool on the Tools panel and then click and drag objects you want to move. To delete an object, click it and drag it to the trash can icon at the top of the Layers palette. * **Duplicate objects:** Click the Duplicate tool on the Tools panel and then click and drag to duplicate objects

An underwater robot that can swim under a ship's hull and inspect its structure is soon to be tested in Norway as part of work being done by the Civil Contingencies Agency in preparation for a crisis on the country's offshore oil and gas rigs. The 'anomaly hunting' will begin in early April after the agency was charged by the Norwegian government in December to test how an off-shore operator would respond to a disaster and whether search and rescue teams could be deployed to help the company. Norwegian submarine is to test the autonomous underwater vehicle.

Photo: Dave Doucette / The Royal Navy An autonomous underwater vehicle (AUV) will be used to inspect the hull of the rig and later a full-sized submarine will be used to explore the vessel's interior. The idea is to try to develop search and rescue tools and equipment and techniques that can be used in responding to a crisis. The agency estimates that for the UK, Greenland, Norway and Iceland, which all operate offshore oil and gas exploration and production rigs, there may be approximately 300 to 400 people on board of the 'oil rig', and that the total number of people on board the entire fleet of rigs is about 1,100. Rig construction projects are some of the largest construction projects undertaken in the UK, with construction at the Teesside development of the Greater Eyemouth Harbour completed in October. Dr Caroline Fyvie, project director for offshore oil and gas at the agency, told the Marine Herald: “The main point of the testing is to see whether an AUV can assess the condition of the hull. We are testing the response of people involved – the protocol and procedures, how long it takes to put them into place, then the response time to get help to the rig, once on board how quickly they do it, the time they take to get up to speed and then perform the tasks at hand.

“Then we will use the submarine to do the same task and try to determine how far you can go in just one dive. We will be using the pilot, the chief engineer and the director as guinea pigs and for that we will need to use a remote-operated vehicle, we can't drill into the ship ourselves. “We are using a rigid ship model that is a visual image of an offshore oil rig, it is very detailed. It will be studied at
